Reading your result

Everything on the previous page is measured live from public play counts - the same figures you saw when you ran Neon Tide. A few honest reads from that data:

The dominant release is a collaboration. Most of the value sits in a co-credited track, so the owner's realizable share depends on master/publishing splits a statement would confirm.

Big streams, smaller owned audience. The catalog leans on a breakout moment more than a dedicated fanbase - the clearest place to build durable value is converting listeners into followers.

The band is wide ($213,000-$421,000) on purpose. It's modeled from public streaming alone and is master-side only - publishing isn't included. A real royalty statement would narrow it considerably.

We built this to be accurate to what's public, not to flatter. If it matches what you already know about Neon Tide, the honest next step is to read it against your actual statements - that's where the range tightens and anything uncollected shows up.

How this is calculated

Value is modeled as sustainable annual Net Label Share (NLS) × a 10-16× market multiple - what the owner keeps after artist royalties, distribution, and reserves, not headline revenue. Other platforms approximated as a labeled share of Spotify. Directional estimate, not an appraisal.

Prepared by Recoup. Estimate only - not financial advice or an offer.
